

COLLEGE OF NEW ROCHELLE NEW ROCHELLE, NEW YORK Today is

but the pieces

of yesterday

fashioned

in a different way.

Time contrasts light and darkness to form patterns through the kalaidescope of my mind.

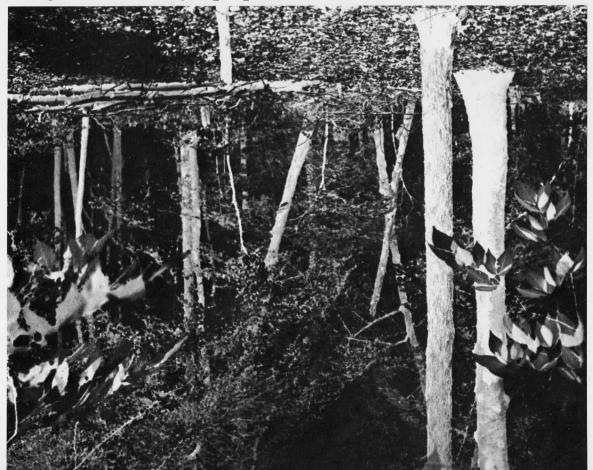

For just as flecks of dust swirl in a ray of sunshine all life moves through me in rhythmic fragments.

Like a tree existing above the ground but living by its roots below, I am living now but my roots burrow back into the past gathering to their very tips pieces of all that I have met.

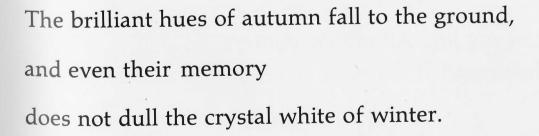

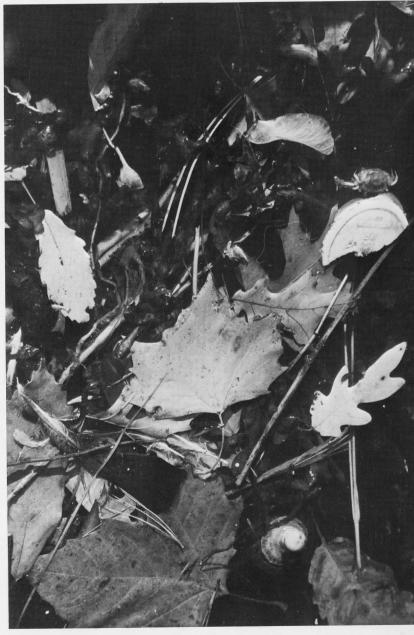

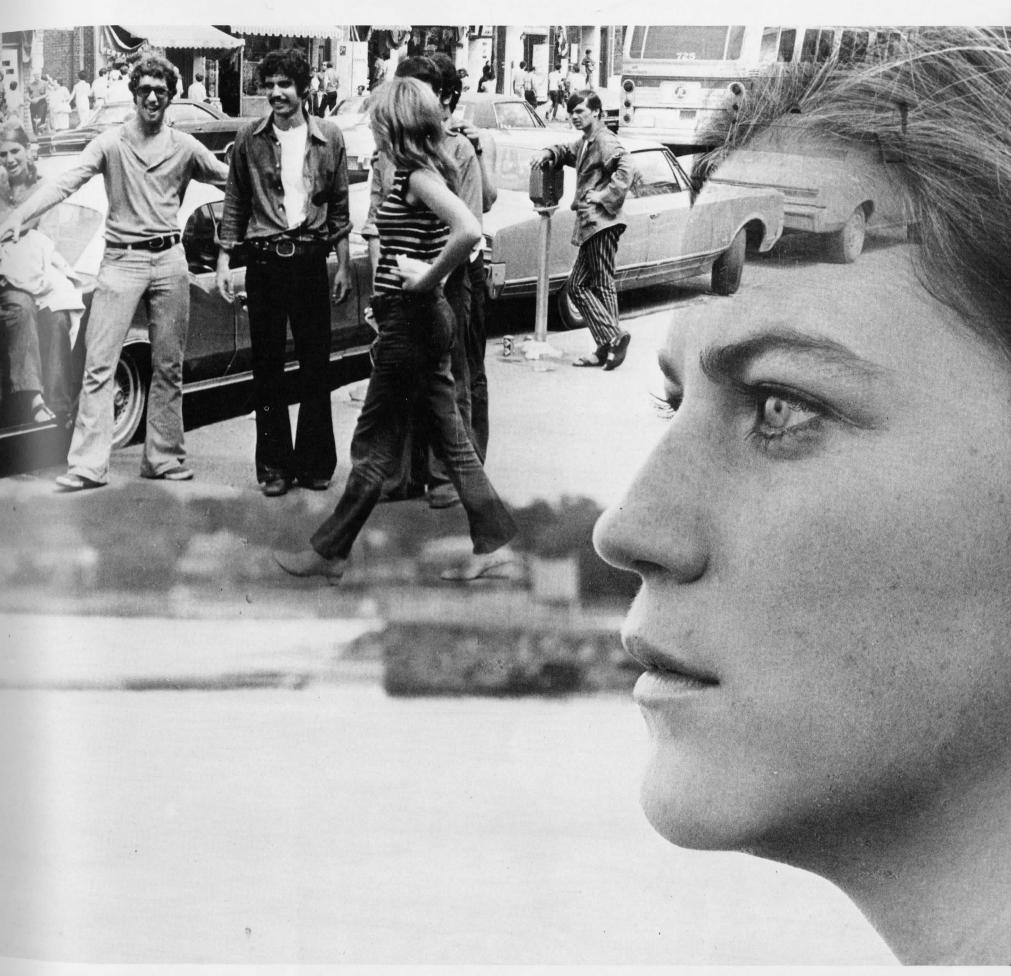

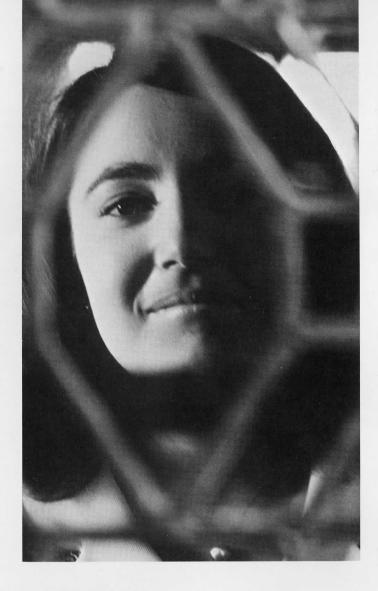

Each moment lives within itself.

I have wrought time into the scheme of my life. All my encounters remain in a blur that comes into focus when recalled.

Yesterday is like a dream—captured again through an inward glance.

Watch the horizon go out forever beyond and farther still;
Hear the water breathe its

Out beyond the dying wharf where the sea began a ship passed
and I waited
the waves it fathered
to leap against the green velvet piers Only once
would the sea
sing the song of the Phoenix round the shell and stone fruits of the sea's conclusion.

A humor wells-up in my heart that smells of the salt marsh and the parting spring earth.
It lifts my life's eye to the rising wind roving round the brown reeds of the sounding Hawthorne water.
I sometimes think that God is there in that airful of damp and young willow.

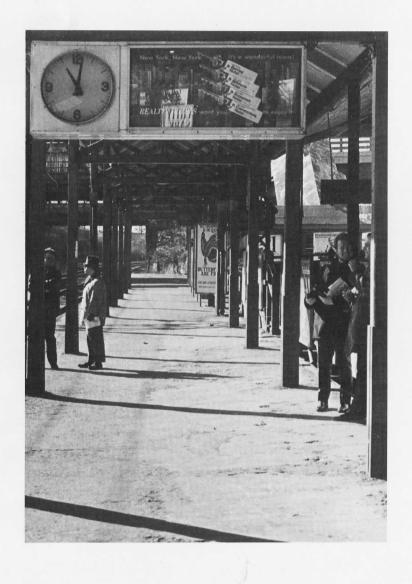

(I know if I were he and wished to write a poem I'd make a lilac bush to fit my lilac mood.)

Somewhere there is a sorcerer who conjures-up this sympathy—perhaps it's me.

It always seems about to speak but moves and leaves me searching for a vanished face in a vanished dream.

michele heffernan

ellen marie ganitsch

patricia cosgrove

We have felt the mists of autumn

As they shroud the fields at evening

Before the rain streams down
the dying leaves,

And we have been stifled by the warm, heavy air

When it swathes that first sharp chill with deceptive softness.

Now we are merely echoes in the night.

Our being has passed into time

And only the phantoms of our laughter dance mockingly
on the wind.
